8 satellite shows not to be missed during Hong Kong Art Week 2018

See what's creating a buzz outside of the usual art fair circuit.

Art Basel and Art Central are due to descend on Hong Kong in the next two weeks, bringing with them a heightened frenzy of art buying, selling and appreciation. However, with most of the headline action confined to within these two heavyweight occasions, it's easy to forget the hum of activity that takes place apart, in hotspots across the city. We've rounded up 8 notable satellite events happening concurrently that add all the more depth to the art-going experience.

Contamination by Antoine D'Agata CHARBON art space, 30 March – 25 May

By: Gavin Yeung

The CHARBON art space in Wong Chuk Hang is featuring the work of Magnum art photographer Antoine D'Agata this month. Titled Contamination, this solo exhibition explores the various underworlds that D'Agata has documented for the past 30 years, providing a no-holds-barred look into the darkest depths of the human psyche as told through the medium of photography.
